Being driven to distraction can cost more than you think.

Talking or texting on the phone while driving is dangerous, very dangerous. As dangerous as driving drunk, for instance. Going hands-free simply doesn't help. It's the conversation that is distracting, not holding the phone. The fact is, one in four crashes involves a driver who's distracted.

Drive now, talk or text later. Whether at home or at work, don't talk or text while you are driving. Instead, either pull over to take or make a call or simply wait until you are not driving to do so. Whatever you do, don't talk and text and drive. No call or message is worth the cost of a crash or the loss of a life.
