

NSC AWARDS

DE&I Safety Champion

an nsc award

This award recognizes organizations with a proven commitment to Diversity, Equity and Inclusion within their safety culture.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

What is the NSC Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Safety Champion Recognition?

NSC is taking action on diversity, equity and inclusion (DE&I), with a commitment to recognize the importance of DE&I to workplace safety and health, and a pledge to help organizations identify and redress imbalances. To perpetuate DE&I in the safety community, the NSC Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Safety Champion Recognition will be awarded to organizations with a proven commitment to DE&I within their safety culture. Recognized organizations will have incorporated DE&I safety initiatives into their culture and core business strategies through major business initiatives where they strive not only to ensure physical safety, but foster an environment where every employee feels secure, welcome and included.

The Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Safety Champion Recognition honors three types of achievement each year:

- Culture – DE&I embedded in organizational culture
- People – Diversity within safety professional workforce
- Program Innovations – Administration of a significant DE&I-related safety program

Organizations can apply or be nominated for recognition based on one of these three criteria. Additional details on these criteria are available below.

APPLICATION/NOMINATION PROCESS

When and how are submissions accepted?

The National Safety Council will accept applications via an online portal. The link to the portal and submission dates are available at nsc.org/DEISafetyChampion. No paper or emailed submissions are accepted.

How will my application be judged and by whom?

All submissions will undergo a technical and media review by National Safety Council staff. The top submissions will be forwarded to a review committee made up of external reviewers.

I've never completed an application before. What do I need to know?

The NSC Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Safety Champion Recognition awards organizations based on three criteria: Culture, People and Program Innovations.

Culture

Inclusion and psychological safety unlock the potential of a diverse workforce. Employee feedback is the most useful data source for measuring psychological safety – the main element being inclusion. NSC has developed an employee survey to gauge employee perceptions regarding psychological safety across key psychological safety dimensions and psychosocial risks to assess culture. Successful applicants will show how DE&I is embedded into their organizational cultures by administering the NSC Psychological Safety Perception Survey to employees. The Psychological Safety Perception Survey is required in order to be considered for recognition in the Culture category.

People

Diversity metrics are used to identify risk areas, prioritize, set program goals and measure the impact of initiatives. Applicants must either provide a summary of their organizational DE&I goals and how they are measured, or must describe specific initiatives taken by their organization that have resulted in increased diversity among safety professionals.

Program Innovations

Underrepresented identity groups in the workplace can create barriers to both physical and psychological safety, ultimately putting workers and the public at additional risk. Innovation is key to eliminating these risks. Applicants must describe the specific DE&I program innovations or initiatives their organization has integrated into the current safety management system, with details on the origin of the idea, how it has improved safety and how the organization recognized those championing the effort.

If I am administering the NSC Psychological Safety Perception Survey to my organization, how will I begin this process?

NSC will provide you with access to the Psychological Safety Perception Survey and you will receive a participant guide, anonymous online link, individual results and benchmarking among other applicants. Full instructions and deadlines for administering this survey are available here. Contact safetysurvey@nsc.org to start or if you have any questions.
