Guidelines

The Campbell Institute engages with organizations dedicated to EHS management and are eager to share their successes. The following guidelines are used to evaluate organizations and can be used to self-assess before applying for membership. Strengths in some areas may offset weaknesses in others.

Leadership commitment to world-class EHS

Drives EHS excellence at all levels of their organization, including the C-suite

Integration of EHS and business management

Integrates systems across EHS with a focus on integration and alignment with business processes

Strong performing EHS metrics

Outperforms the majority of their peers in traditional safety metrics and uses leading indicators to drive performance

Willingness to share successes and lessons learned

Shares best practices, successes and lessons learned with one another and the world at large

Strong environmental performance and understanding of sustainability

Excels in environmental performance and has an understanding of how sustainability is a competitive advantage

Robust and continuous improvement process

Understands EHS excellence is a journey rather than a destination and embraces robust continuous improvement

Expectations

- Maintain active participation in subcommittees and workgroups
- Share annual leading and lagging data
- Communicate serious incident information and resulting action plans
- Benchmark best practices with members

Membership is a three-year commitment. Annual dues are based on organizational revenue.

Under $1 billion: $20,000/year

From $1 to $25 billion: $40,000/year

Over $25 billion: $65,000/year

The Campbell Institute at the National Safety Council is the Center of EHS Excellence. Built on the belief that EHS is at the core of business success, operational excellence and financial performance, the Institute helps organizations of all sizes and sectors achieve and sustain excellence.
